

"The book, New Approaches to English Language and Education, examines the importance of cultural and intercultural perspectives which emerge from learning English as a foreign language. It is crucial for educators and EFL students in Taiwan to understand these concepts. I would like to recommend and congratulate the authors and editors of whom produced such an inspirational book."

CHOU, Shieu-Ming
President and Professor at Wenzao Ursuline University of Languages, Taiwan

"This is a truly enticing book for those who are interested in "stories" about language teaching and research. Although the stories took place in the primary and high schools and universities of Taiwan, they will surely inspire and encourage, as the authors hoped, EFL teachers in Chinese mainland, Japan, Korea, Asia at large and other places around the globe, who are concerned about combining teaching and research and who are committed to the high ideals of intercultural education."

SUN You-Zhong
Vice President and Professor, Beijing Foreign Studies University, China

"This edited volume is an impressive collection of research on intercultural English language teaching and learning in Taiwan. The book is also novel in that it draws largely on the doctoral research of 12 Taiwanese teachers of English, demonstrating the importance of doctoral theses in shaping English language education in Taiwan. The 12 case studies of teachers' practices and learners' experiences across diverse subject areas will stimulate thinking and practice on intercultural language education in Taiwan, and more generally in East Asia. The book offers encouragement to all English language teachers seeking to develop the intercultural dimension of their practice, and to doctoral researchers to publish the important research contained in doctoral theses."

Prue Holmes
Reader in Education, Director of Post-Graduate Research, Durham University, UK.

The Editors

Wen-Chuan Lin is Head of English Department at Wenzao Ursuline University of Languages, Taiwan.

Michael Byram is Professor Emeritus at Durham University, UK and Guest Professor at the University of Luxembourg.

Cover image: © Petra Janka

New Approaches to English
Language and Education in Taiwan

New Approaches to English Language and Education in Taiwan

Cultural and Intercultural Perspectives

Edited by Wen-Chuan Lin & Michael Byram

Cultural and Intercultural Perspectives

Edited by Wen-Chuan Lin and Michael Byram

ISBN 978-957-483-868-4